

THE CONFLUENCE SERIES

Voices of Resilience in the Currents of Change

Invitation to Collaborate

Dear Friend,

You are formally invited to join the Confluence: a growing group of knowledge keepers, land stewards, restoration ecologists, leaders, teachers, scientists, farmers, elders, artists, activists, visionaries and non-human kin, devoted to deepening our shared understanding and envisioning a resilient future, where the land, the water and its people mutually thrive.

Who: You! All voices are welcome. We gratefully invite suggestions and contacts, and encourage everyone to pass this invitation along to anyone who might want to join.

What: Community conversations, storytelling, workshops, film screenings, lectures, presentations, performances and field trips.

When: The Confluence Series is an ongoing program, so we are able to work with your availability. Rather than one big bang, let's find a steady pulse.

Where: Rooted in Walla Walla, Washington, the Confluence Series flows in a global current. We hope to host as many in-person events as possible, but online events are very welcome. Each event will be recorded and shared digitally, to carry these ripples out into the world.

Why: Humanity stands at a pivotal juncture: a Confluence of historic Change. Everyone everywhere is implicated. Any path to a resilient future must integrate ecology and society, and that begins with learning, listening and sharing our knowledge, wisdom, traditions and visions.

How: Built on a broad base of collaborative support, the essence of the Confluence Series is community organizing, event promotion, media production and fundraising.

"There is nothing not tied to the flow."

—Katrina Roberts, from "Poetic License" by Buster Simpson.

Local Roots, Global Current

The Confluence Series is produced in partnership with Fallow Media, to document every event and share it freely with the world, creating videos, podcasts, hybrid events and educational content from the many currents that flow together here.

Valued Voices

We are committed to making all events free to the public. As we gain momentum, we are working hard on fundraising so we can compensate each of the individual contributors for their valuable time.

The Confluence Series is exclusively volunteer-run and all donations will go directly to these contributors.

Change is flowing—will you join the current?
